Editor's Note:

The Frieze is back and we hope you find it in better condition than last year's edition. We tried to figure out a legitimate reason for publishing a book with pictures that everybody has seen before, but we didn't want to screw everything up and give The Frieze a purpose. Lets just say that if you were willing to pay for a half dozen unneccessary T-shirts a year, we figured you would probably be willing to pay for this.

We tried to clean the book up a little by introducing borders and folio tabs to the pages while we strove to improve the clarity of the collages as well. As for the cover, we decided to move away from the cartoon designs of years past and use what we believe is a more professional and stylish design. Artwork on the divider pages was a collective effort done by greek artists who answered our request for ideas and the quotes were added to give those of us who can read an added perspective. Hopefully, we have produced something that has successfully captured the memories of this past year and we hope a similar effort is considered by future editors.

In case you were wondering, content of an offensive or embarrassing nature does not neccessarily reflect the opinions or tastes of the editors or the organizations involved. In other words, our asses are covered! So love it or leave it...here it is.

A Day in the Life

There is a plastic corral, green and red, and cryptic numerals with lights, bright lights. Reflected on the troughs of ice cream and novelties as the empty tummied herd straggles up to the safety glass portals, always open.

The chattel sway and clutch hooffuls of celophaned preservitives. Familiar oders fill their nostrils, smokey, beery stench and microwave garbage.

Hatless cowpokes round up the ragged herd slightly ill at ease, fingers tense on the registers.

A hefer in leather bitches at the hired hand about seven cents and Bazooka gum. Impatient bulls snort and throw their wooly heads.

Restless hooves pound lenoleum, the stampede erupts, breaking through the gates, before the rancher can throw the bolt.

The rampage disperses over the asphalt and concrete range chomping burritos, slurping Big Gulps. Cattle rustle in drunken exhileration, dodging P.G. County cops, untamable, unfenced.
